LEARNING ACTIVITIES AND METHODOLOGY

3.1. Lectures.

Lectures will focus on the study of European and National Competition Law. They will be face-to-face classes that will be the basis and incentive for the individual work and the corresponding training.

The classes will split in two parts. The first hour will be used for giving a detailed and practical description of the topics. Thereafter, for approximately thirty minutes a debate between the students and the lecturer will take place in order to analyse the most relevant issues.

Legal texts for preparing the lectures will be provided in advance in order to give students some time to prepare the lecture and to anticipate a preliminary opinion on the subject. Such a preparation will enable them to discover the new materials and explanations that the professor will give them, but also to share their conclusions with their peers.

3.2. Classes

Students will apply the theoretical knowledge acquired along the course, and their own personal opinion about the actual problems analysed. Therefore, professors will present and analyse the conceptual aspects with a permanent reference to the current issues.

Besides, lectures include complementary activities such as dealing with practical cases.

3.3 Student's personal work

As a result, the abovementioned classes will provide an accurate basis for gaining deeper knowledge and a subsequent individual reflection.

Students may carry out activities that allow for reflection, internalization and learning of the required academic contents and to implement the desired skills. Thus, they will jointly reach the general and specific objectives of this subject.

ASSESSMENT SYSTEM

Students will participate in all the lectures, and will have to solve the practical cases.

Therefore, there will be an ongoing assessment through all the course. All together will mean up to 30% of the total mark.

An individual final examination will take place, which will mean up to 70% of the total mark.
