OBJECTIVES

This course is designed for law graduates who will shortly be practicing lawyers and who have an intermediate level of English, with a view to helping them communicate orally with their English-speaking clients, read and understand legal texts in English, and draft simple documents in that language. Although translation will inevitably play a role, this is not a course for English-Spanish legal translators but rather is intended for legal professionals who need to achieve an active command of English. Classes will be taught in English from the practical perspective of promoting both oral and written communication. This course is divided into seven units that present the vocabulary and basic concepts of contract law, corporate law, civil procedure, criminal law and procedure, labor law, tax law and property law.

In view of the foregoing, students will:

- learn the basic concepts of the Anglo-American system of common law
- achieve an active command of the basic legal vocabulary in the six areas of law covered in the course
- familiarize themselves with the peculiar features of Anglo-American legal language, including the differences between legal usage in the US and in England and Wales, and with an emphasis on what are often called false friends that, despite their similar appearance, may have opposite meanings in English and Spanish
- be capable of using these skills to explain (both orally and in writing) the basic aspects of Spanish law in English in the six areas of law examined during the course

LEARNING ACTIVITIES AND METHODOLOGY

For each of the principal areas of law studied, and using different activities, the professor will introduce students to the basic terminology and legal texts in English will be read and discussed in class. In each case students will be asked to compare and contrast the principal features of Anglo-American law with the legal system in Spain or in their countries. The goal is to ensure that students are not only capable of understanding the texts, but also of discussing them and to drafting simple documents in English based on the texts read in class.

These are ¿traditional¿ classes in which the student¿s active participation and total attention in class are essential, without relying on laptop computers or using mobile phones. (In exchange, the professor guarantees that no student will be the victim of death by powerpoint).

Students will be provided access to the class texts and materials one week prior to the commencement of each unit, so that those who wish to prepare the lessons beforehand may do so.

ASSESSMENT SYSTEM

% end-of-term-examination:	60
% of continuous assessment (assignments, laboratory, practicals...):	40

Students will take a separate exam at the end of each of the six units covered. Exams are generally divided into two parts. The first part consists of terminology exercises and will have a component to test active vocabulary (to ascertain whether students have mastered the basic legal English vocabulary from each unit), together with a component to test passive vocabulary (to ensure that students have learned certain legal concepts that are necessary in order to understand the material). The second part is a practical exercise in which students must demonstrate that they are capable of using the vocabulary and concepts acquired by answering in English a question concerning Spanish law (or their own law). Prior to the exam there will be an in-class exercise, supervised by the professor, to prepare them for the second part of the exam.
