Globalization: Research Seminar

International Studies Degree, Rooms 6.1.06 (lectures M 14:30-16:00) and 6.1.01
(seminars W 14:30-16:45)]

Course Objectives

The origins, nature and consequence of globalization are at the forefront of social, political and economic research today. This course seeks to reveal the present state of knowledge of its causes, mechanisms, consequences and reactions, concentrating more on those which may be considered essential to understanding present reality and possible future scenarios. The course will review the fundamental theories to understanding globalization, provide material to evaluate the assessment of globalization and discuss policy formulation.

Course Structure

The course is designed as a research seminar course. It is organized in two tiers: one which will provide the theoretical fundamentals and empirical evidence to understand the present state of globalization and a second tier will lead to the presentation of a final project related to the course. Tier 1 will alternate lectures which summarize and extend basic readings with seminars in which students will present briefings on specific tasks assigned with an extensive literature. These tasks will range from summaries of research; presenting and discussing results; identifying problems in modeling and quantifying causes, effects, consequences and policy impact; and proposing and defending policy statements and positions. The dynamics of this course will be that of a task force on globalization. Tier 2 is organized as a sequence of workshops to prepare and improve the final research essay.

Prerequisites

You will be asked to read a very large number of articles, mostly available on the web. You will be expected to read all of the articles assigned and prepare for class discussions. Discussions will be a major part of the course and your final grade. This is a hands-on course and you are expected to assist ALL lectures, seminars and discussions. A solid command of written and oral English is essential, previous econometrics courses are indispensable for interpreting results in the assignments, endurance in reading and processing up to a sixty pages of academic literature a day is taken for granted.

Seminar formats

Seminars will take on a variety of formats. During debates students will be divided into teams. Teams will compete against each other. They will present statements related to the assignments and answer questions from the floor alternatingly. Each team will receive points for their group performance which they will divide among themselves according to the merits of each member. Groups will also be required to produce policy briefings. These will be based on the data collected, analyzed and summarized together with the articles consulted. Each group will be requested to write a policy briefing directed to government on the topic assigned. Groups will be asked to present and defend their policy recommendations. As in the case of debates, groups will be assigned points for their performance, which will be reassigned among the members. Other formats will be explained in class.

Rules

There will be NO make-ups for any of the missed activities in the course. Failure to appear for seminars, exams or any other form of evaluation will result in a zero for that session.

Course outline

The course is structured in 5 blocks. Each block has a sequence of lectures and seminars, covering either two or three weeks. Each session (lecture-blue and seminar-green) requires a previous reading assignment. The remaining sessions are spread out through the course and are to be dedicated to drafting, perfecting and presenting the final course project. See class schedule yellow.
